Corey Yoder of Coriander Quilts

I have always loved using a clean, crisp white background with my warm sherbet-toned fabrics as the contrast lets the colors shine. But for those times when I want something that feels a little bit special, there is Coriander Seeds.

This collection has ten white-on-white prints that coordinate with all of my fabrics. The dainty florals, meandering vines, orange peels, polka dots in two sizes and happy words, are a mix of old and new prints, all of which are now favorites.

With these Seeds, you're sure to find just the right background print to compliment any fabric.

It all begins with fabric, doesn't it? Corey married her husband Ryan in 1997 and shortly thereafter, a love affair of fabric began. She began purchasing fabric before she knew how to sew or had even touched a sewing machine. Corey soon realized that she needed an outlet for her fabric obsession. Her family includes generations of quilt makers from both her mom's family and dad's family so quilt making was a natural choice. She began making quilts and found she thoroughly enjoyed the process.

When Corey's oldest daughter, Chloe, was born in 2005, her attention moved to clothing design and led to her appliqued children's clothing business, Little Miss Shabby. Corey spent a number of years designing and selling her creations until the birth of her youngest daughter, Elonie, in 2009. At that time, Corey focused once again on quilts, specifically quilt design.

Her quilt designs are often traditional with a modern twist. Corey's quilt patterns have been published in numerous magazines, collaborative books, and most recently she authored her first book, Playful Petals.
